RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS

Hollywood's most glamorous night descended upon us. The 90th Academy Awards aired Sunday night, pitting beautiful, rich celebrities and their films against each other for the ultimate prize: a golden man named Oscar. If you're itching for Oscars content, check out metro.us/entertainment for complete coverage.

IN JOKEY SPEECH, TRUMP TALKS N. KOREAN NUKES

In a joke-filled monologue at a dinner with journalists, President Donald Trump suggested on Saturday night that the U.S. will be meeting with North Korea. "Now we are talking and they, by the way, called up a couple of days ago. They said that 'We would like to talk.' And I said, 'So would we, but you have to denuke,'" Trump told attendees at the annual Gridiron Club dinner. "We will be meeting and we'll see if anything positive happens," he added. It was unclear if Trump was joking or if formal U.S.-North Korea talks were imminent. On Sunday, a senior U.S. official said Trump did not hear from North Korea that the country would like to start talks. Trump's remarks came shortly before South Korea's presidency announced on Sunday that South Korean officials will travel to North Korea on Monday to discuss improving relations on the peninsula.

FLORIDA SENATE VOTES TO ARM SOME TEACHERS

2 The Florida Senate rejected a proposal to ban assault weapons, and voted for a measure to arm some teachers, weeks after 17 people were killed in the deadliest high school shooting in U.S. history. An amendment that would have banned assault weapons attached to a wider bill failed on Saturday in a largely party-line vote, in response to the Feb. 14 killing of 14 students and three faculty at Marjory Stoneman

Douglas High School in the Fort Lauderdale suburb of Parkland. The vote was 20-17 against the assault weapon ban, with two Republicans joining all of the senate's 15 Democrats in support of the proposal, the Miami Herald reported. After the Senate rejected the ban, Stoneman Douglas student Jaclyn Corin tweeted, "This breaks my heart, but we will NOT let this ruin our movement. This is for the kids."

PALESTINIAN CONFLICT

3 A Palestinian protester runs to take cover with others during clashes with Israeli forces near Khan Yunis by the border between Israel and the southern Gaza Strip. Israeli forces had closed access to the Gaza Strip and West Bank around the Purim holiday, the Jerusalem Post reported.

LAWMAKER URGES TARIFF EXEMPTIONS FOR NAFTA

4 An influential U.S. lawmaker said on Sunday that all fairly traded steel and aluminum, especially from Canada and Mexico, should be excluded from President Donald Trump's proposed tariffs. Kevin Brady, chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives Ways and Means Committee, which has jurisdiction over trade policy, was speaking on the sidelines at NAFTA talks among the U.S., Canada and Mexico, where he said there had been progress in reworking the 24-year-old trade deal. The prospect of a trade war sparked by Trump's proposed tariffs rattled financial markets. Canada and Mexico have threatened retaliation, and the European Union said it would apply 25 percent tariffs on about $3.5 billion of imports from the U.S. if Trump carried out his plan.

WH: RUSSIAN MILITARY KILLED CIVILIANS IN SYRIA

5 The U.S. on Sunday made its strongest accusation to date of Moscow's complicity in civilian deaths in Syria's besieged Ghouta region, saying Russian aircraft flew bombing missions in defiance of a United Nations ceasefire. The White House said Russian military aircraft took off from Syria's Hmeymim Airfield and carried out at least 20 daily bombing missions between Feb. 24 and Feb.

28. It did not say whether the jets dropped ordnance, which could be harder to determine than tracking the flight paths of Russian aircraft on U.S. radar. But the U.S. directly accused Russia of killing civilians. "Russia has gone on to ignore [a U.N. ceasefire's] terms and to kill innocent civilians under the false auspices of counterterrorism operations," the White House said in a statement.

GUN CONTROL LAWS

President Trump suggested that law enforcement should be able to preemptively take away weapons from people who are deemed dangerous, saying, "Take the guns first, go through due process second." Do you agree or disagree that police should be able to take away guns without due process?

Trump greets Parkland survivor Samuel Zeif at a listening session on Wednesday, Feb. 21. GETTY IMAGES

OP-ED: WHAT IT'S LIKE IN PARKLAND THREE WEEKS LATER

A former Philly-area resident describes what it's like to live 3 miles from the location of the horrific school shooting.

I recently moved from Central Pennsylvania to Coral Springs, Florida, just 3 or so miles from Parkland, the location of Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School, where 17 people were killed by a gunman Feb. 14.

I have never seen a community in so much pain. Funerals every day! Strangers embracing and comforting each other. There are conversations about the shooting everywhere I go: in stores, restaurants, the super-market. Now, over two weeks later, all around town, people are even angrier, sadder and more determined that something good can come out of the latest horrific school shooting.

Students here are brave, articulate and dedicated to making a change. They are strong and determined. We in the community will help them implement the changes needed to make getting an education safe. We must have their backs.

Americans, especially Floridians, are very protective of their right to own guns. We're quick to scoff at any proposal aimed at controlling ownership of weapons of war. It's clear to me, from the incredible increase in mass shootings since the Assault Weapons Ban expired in 2004, that our government can and must do something to protect us.

There are many opinions on how to or whether to ban guns on school property. Our president wants our teachers and staff armed and trained to kill. He does not like gun-free zones on school property. (At least that was his opinion this week). The National Rifle Association thinks more guns will keep us safe. Common sense does not support these arguments. I just do not understand.

I believe that arming teachers will not stop a person with an AR-15. It is clear to me that the only reason for owning an assault rifle is to kill as many people as possible in the smallest amount of time. Armed staff in our schools make no sense to me. If the guns are locked up for safety, to keep out of children's reach, they will not be readily available in an emergency.

This is not an option that will make things better. Making it illegal or much more difficult to purchase these weapons of mass destruction, like the one used in Parkland, makes sense. Responsible gun owners should welcome regulations on age, mental health, owning and storing such weapons so that they are no longer used to hunt down innocent people.

My daughter and daughter-in-law are teachers, and they should not be the last line of defense against assassination. Making them safe is something I am passionate about, and I will do everything I can to stop this madness.

Sensible gun laws and regulations are needed to guarantee our lives and future generations. While the Second Amendment protects the right to bear arms, that right is not unlimited and does not prohibit all regulation of either firearms or similar devices.

I hope we keep the focus on what happened and don't miss this opportunity to make changes.

Northeastern US faces flooding, outages after killer storm hits

The storm packed powerful winds that downed trees and left more than a million people without power.

More than 1.5 million customers remained without power throughout the eastern United States early on Sunday, and communities on the New England coast faced more flooding two days after a powerful storm snapped trees, downed wires and killed at least nine people.

The remnants of the storm, known as a nor'easter, lingered on Sunday with flood watches and wind advisories in effect until 1 p.m. in northeastern United States even as it moved hundreds of miles out to sea, hampering efforts to restore power.

The governors of both Massachusetts and New York declared a state of emergency on Saturday afternoon, following similar announcements by the governors of Virginia and Maryland on Friday.

The moves give those states access to federal resources.

The storm carried hurricane-force winds in excess of 90 mph, sending seawater churning into streets in Boston and nearby shore towns — the second time the area has been flooded this year.

The National Weather Service (NWS) said that while winds weakened on Sunday and most of the rain and snow moved offshore, flooding and extreme high tides could still affect the coastal areas from Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Long Island.

"We're definitely not out of the woods yet," said meteorologist David Roth at the weather service's Weather Prediction Center in College Park, Maryland.

Falling trees killed seven people — including two boys who died when trees struck their homes — in Connecticut, Maryland, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Virginia, according to local media and police. Two others died in the storm, according to media reports, including a 41-year-old man in Andover, New Jersey, who came in contact with power lines.

Private forecasting service AccuWeather said the storm dumped as much as 18 inches of snow on parts of New York state and Pennsylvania. The Massachusetts town of East Bridgewater received nearly 6 inches of rain, the NWS said.

The storm also snarled transportation from the Middle Atlantic into New England, with more than a quarter of flights into and out of New York's three major airports and Boston's airport canceled on Friday, tracking service FlightAware.com reported.

The problems carried over into Saturday, with hundreds of flights canceled into and out of New York and Boston, according to the website.

One flight landing at Washington's Dulles International Airport on Friday experienced turbulence so rough that most passengers became sick and the pilots were on the verge of becoming ill, the Federal Aviation Administration said.

Scientists create system to forecast the flu like weather

Weather forecasts can show a storm brewing over the ocean, predicting when it will hit land so that residents can prepare. What if the same could be done for the flu?

Scientists at Columbia University's School of Public Health have developed a system that can predict the geographic spread of influenza, providing a forecast for when the illness could reach certain areas.

"The aim is to try to take some of the methods we use in numerical weather prediction, and see if it can apply to an infectious system," said Jeff Shaman, a Columbia professor and senior author of the study on this system.

A flu forecast would show how likely it is that the infection will peak within the next few weeks, how many cases of the flu will occur and where the "surges" of sickness will be.

This would help the

A flu forecast would help hospitals and pharmacies be more prepared to treat patients. GETTY IMAGES medical field better prepare to handle all the incoming patients. Health centers are often short on beds, medicine and vaccines during flu season, because the infection varies so much.

There are other models to predict the spread of infections, Shaman said, but they don't really simulate how people come into contact with one another, which is how diseases spread.

To factor that in, this system uses commuting patterns — specifically, the rates at which people work in one location and live in another — along with the latest data on a flu outbreak.

"It can't predict first cases, but it can predict the onset, when [the flu] rises above the noise," Shaman said.

Shaman has been working on systems to forecast the flu for about a decade. They've gotten better — his team plans to use this latest system to make online forecasts for the 2018-19 flu season — but the work still has a ways to go.

Shaman hopes one day a flu forecast will be the norm, even showing when infections will first start — arguably more useful information than tomorrow's weather.

"One of the great things about infectious diseases, unlike weather, is you can do something about it," he said. "It's really a great benefit to both individuals and the population at large."

TV reboots we can't wait to see

In recent years, multiplexes have been packed with new cinematic versions of old classics, from "Planet of the Apes" to "Star Trek." And television has quickly copied Hollywood's lead: This TV season has brought us the likes of "Will & Grace" and "Dynasty" alone. The success of some of these series has provoked various other networks to follow suit, and there are now at least 20 new television reboots in the pipeline. Here are the ones we're most looking forward to.

GREGORY WAKEMAN

ALL IMAGES GETTY

"Roseanne"

ABC has already shot 9 new episodes of the sitcom (which premieres March 27) — and Roseanne Barr, John Goodman, Sara Gilbert, Laurie Metcalf and more are all set to return.

"Charmed"

Shannen Doherty, Alyssa Milano, Holly Marie Combs and later Rose McGowan played the three sisters/witches for eight seasons in the fantasy show. Melonie Diaz and Sarah Jeffery will step into two of those roles and "Jane The Virgin" creator Jennie Urman will executive produce.

"Murphy Brown"

The old team is very much getting back together for the "Murphy Brown" revival. Stars Candice Bergen, Faith Ford, Joe Regalbuto and Grant Shaud are involved and CBS has already given it a 13-episode series order.

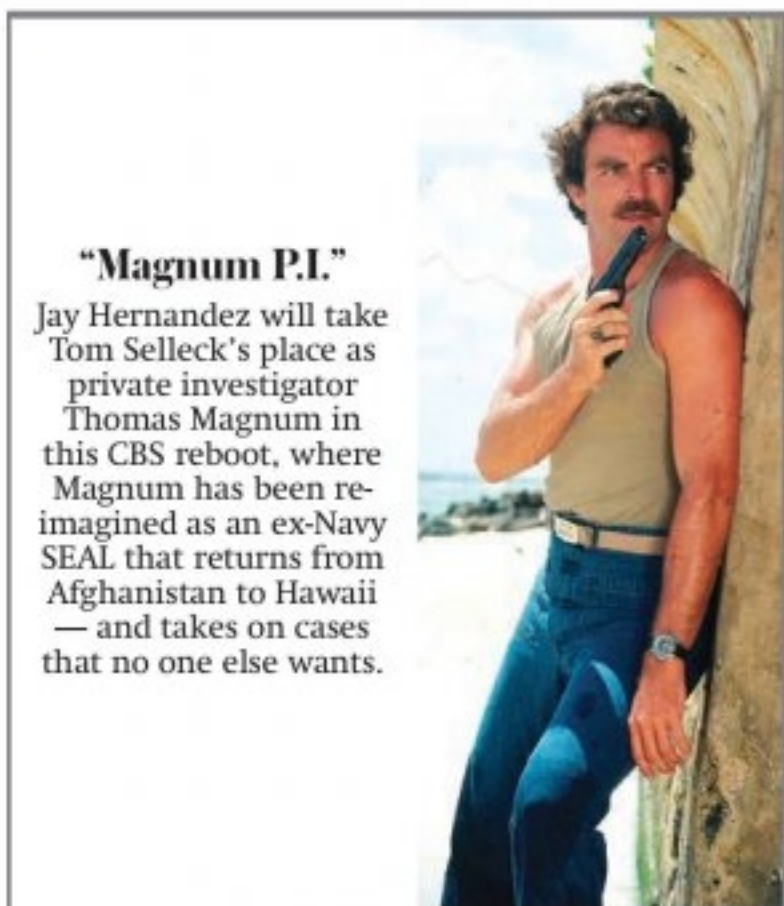

"The Twilight Zone"

This might be the most tantalizing reboot of the lot: Simon Kinberg (The "X-Men" franchise), Marco Ramirez ("The Defenders") and the one and only Jordan Peele ("Get Out") are overseeing its return as producers for CBS All Access.

"Heathers"

"Heathers" was all set to premiere on March 7 — but Paramount Network delayed its release following the high school shooting in Florida last month. The reboot "already courted controversy for reimagining the trio of bullies as individuals from marginalized groups."

"Magnum P.I."

Jay Hernandez will take Tom Selleck's place as private investigator Thomas Magnum in this CBS reboot, where Magnum has been reimagined as an ex-Navy SEAL that returns from Afghanistan to Hawaii — and takes on cases that no one else wants.

"Muppet Babies"

It's not just dramas and sitcoms that are getting the reboot treatment: Disney Junior is bringing back baby cartoon adventures of Kermit, Miss Piggy and friends to a new audience. Another bonus? The always-hilarious Jenny Slate is involved, too.

"Cagney & Lacey"

Yet another reboot from CBS, "Cagney & Lacey" will revolve around two female police detectives and friends that look to keep the streets of Los Angeles safe. It is still in the early stages of development.

PAT KING

Friday is record-release day in the music biz. This means that Spotify debuts singles by your favorite artists just in time for you to create some playlists over the weekend for your commute and beyond. Here are the our picks from recent releases on Spotify.

"Top Off," by DJ Khaled feat. Jay-Z, Future & Beyoncé

This collab between some of the heaviest hitters totally delivers one of the catchiest songs in recent memory about outrunning the cops. With a catchy auto-tuned chorus hook by Future, verses by music's King and Queen Jay-Z and Beyoncé, and slamming beats by DJ Khaled, the song fully delivers on its star power and then some. Out of all the new releases on Spotify this week, "Top Off" is the front-to-back banger that will surely help to wake you up as you guzzle coffee from your travel mug in the morning.

"Over and Over and Over," by Jack White

Rock 'n' roll's Willy Wonka, Jack White, is officially back! This all-out guitar assault should check all of the boxes that longtime fans are looking for with some wild unexpected left-field turns. Try not to air-guitar too much inside of a packed subway car.

"Powerglide," by Rae Sremmurd feat. Juicy J

If there is any justice in the world, this new single by Rae Sremmurd featuring Juicy J should be the runaway hit of the season. You can almost picture crowds shouting, "I WAS SLIDING IN THE LAMB' WITH THE POWERGLIDE" come festival season. But why wait? You could do that in your cubicle right now!

"Everyday," by Logic & Marshmellow

This new single by positive rapper Logic and EDM producer Marshmellow will get you in the zone to crush it at work. It's infectious chorus "I work hard every motherf---in' dayeee-yay" will be your new mantra to hum as you pump yourself up for the work week.

Teachers need a different kind of ammunition in the classroom. ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

Here's what we should actually arm teachers with

With the new #armmewith online campaign, educators ask to be provided with anything but guns.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Is the best way to prevent school shootings to arm teachers with guns? Teachers all over the country have been using the hashtag #Armmewith to send a strong message to lawmakers and President Trump in the wake of the horrific school shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, that left 17 people dead Feb. 14.

Politicians have been trying to curb any discussion on a nationwide assault-rifle ban to appease the National Rifle Association, a powerful, deep-pocketed lobby.

But teachers are talking about it — they've been posting more practical things they could be armed with instead guns.

Ricky Davila summed up the movement in this tweet: "Teachers from all around America are joining the #ArmMeWith movement where they are calling to be armed with Books, Empathy, Respect, Time, Smaller Class Sizes, Funding, Resources, Wisdom, Raises...NOT guns"

American Federation of Teachers President Randi Weingarten said she believes that President Donald Trump isn't listening to what teachers really need to be armed with.

"Trump wants to spend money on bonuses for armed teachers, yet has cut summer-school and after-school programs, and he argues we can't afford to pay for school-safety programs, school nurses and counselors, and other programs that help kids," Weingarten said in a statement.

"How would arming teachers even work? Would kindergarten teachers be carrying guns in holsters? Is every classroom now going to have a gun closet? Anyone who pushes arming teachers doesn't understand teachers and doesn't understand our schools. Adding more guns to schools may create an illusion of safety, but in reality, it would make our classrooms less safe."

So what should we arm teachers with? According to a study by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, of the 10 leading causes of death of children between 10 and 24, the top three — accidents, suicide and homicide — kill six times as many kids as the next seven reasons on the list combined.

The study concluded that 50 percent of all lifetime cases of mental illnesses begin by age 14, and 75 percent begin at the age of 24.

Psychotherapist Ryan Beale, the founder of Prepare U, a school-based mental health intervention and awareness program, said he believes these we should arm teachers with mental health professionals instead of guns.

"Understanding our psychology as human beings is the best next step to curb the tide of this social change that we are going through," says Beale.

"Schools look and say 'this shouldn't be our problem' because it takes a village. The challenge is, that's where kids are acting out some of the anxieties that they are feeling at home.

"You are going to see these behaviors acted out in the school system. In the past, we believed this was not the school's responsibility. We also see this now as this is the school's opportunity to create a huge social change."

CELTICS JUST NOT A 'TITLE TEAM'

This spring is going to be a whole hell of a lot of fun in Boston as the Celtics and Bruins both look like legit contenders to win their respective conferences and advance to their respective championship rounds.

As far as winning the whole thing though – this might be a bridesmaid year for the city as the Pats already finished as the NFL's runner-up and the C's and B's may very well follow suit. Sticking to the Celtics for now, they just seem a notch below the NBA's true elite in 2017-18 as the Warriors and Rockets look like the true top tier of pro basketball.

Celtics honks will quickly point out that the C's have already beaten both Golden State and Houston this season, and the C's nearly toppled the Rockets in Houston this past Saturday night.

I'll counter with the

Matt Burke is the Executive Sports Editor and a columnist at Metro US.

Follow him on Twitter @burke_metro fact that both of those Celtics wins occurred in the calendar year 2017, and both took place at the friendly confines of TD Garden. The C's also didn't have to deal with Chris Paul in that Dec. 28, 2017 win over the Rockets and they had to make a miraculous 26-point comeback to grab that home win.

The 92-88 win over the Warriors in Boston took place before Thanksgiving, just to drive home how long ago that was, and Steph Curry looked to still be injured from a bruised right thigh injury that night.

Plus - the next time the two teams played, a motivated and healthy Curry dropped 49 on the C's, scoring 13 points over the final 1:42.

In the Houston game Saturday night, the Celtics looked like the better team throughout much of the game. But the fact of the matter is, the C's were outscored 37-31 in the fourth quarter and were burned, big-time, by a late 10-2 Houston run. The Celtics' top two players in Kyrie Irving and Al Horford also struggled against Houston throughout Saturday's tilt.

Irving and Horford combined to shoot 10-of-29 on the night, and both players had late, costly blunders. Irving had the ball stolen from him by Trevor Ariza in the final minutes and Horford did not call a time out on an offensive rebound to save a key possession.

Look, Kyrie is excellent, and he's actually surpassed expectations in his first year in Boston. He's a top 10 player in the league. He's also proven to be a clutch performer throughout the season and a clutch performer throughout this NBA career (41 points in Game 5 of the 2016 NBA Finals, the key shot in Game 7 that year to beat Golden State). But I'm just not ready to put him in the class of a Kobe Bryant or a Paul Pierce in terms of "clutch." You need one of those guys to win a championship, and right now we need to see a bit more out of Kyrie to put him in that category. "Clutch Kyrie" existed in the playoffs when LeBron was getting all the focus put on him by a defense. Does "Clutch Kyrie" exist as the no-doubt No. 1 on a team? We'll find out.

The road ahead

The Celtics will continue their road trip Monday night when they take on the lowly Bulls in Chicago (8 p.m., NBCSB). Following the Bulls game, they'll have a national TV date on Thursday with the Timberwolves in Minnesota (8 p.m., TNT) before returning home to face the Pacers next Sunday night.

Now, this is all nit-picky stuff - I'll admit. The Celtics are 44-20 and will likely finish with the best record in the Eastern Conference. They are unbelievably doing all this without Gordon Hayward.

But the absence of Hayward will hurt the most when things start to get real with this Celtics team. If the Celtics win the East, which I think they will do, they will meet either the Warriors or Rockets in the NBA Finals. With a completely healthy Hayward, I think they could take either team to seven games. Without a completely healthy Hayward, I think they get swept or lose in five to either team.

Upsets in the NBA playoffs can happen, yes. A team can steal a game here or there. But to beat an all-time super team like the Warriors or Rockets four out of seven times, you've got to have an all-time super team of your own. The Celtics, for as great as they've been this season, just aren't there yet.

CREEPY KRAFT

Robert Kraft added some fuel to the "baby mama" fire this past weekend in Hollywood when the Paparazzi said congratulations to Kraft and his girlfriend Ricki Noel Lander. Kraft replied with a "thank you," and neither responded when the piranhas with cameras followed up with a, "Whose baby is it?" The easy thing for Kraft right now would be to lay low and stay out of, ya know, Hollywood, California. Instead, the guy seems to be embracing his own celebrity — showing up at every sporting event and social gathering known to man. Have at it if you're a 76-year-old billionaire, I guess. But it's seriously time for Kraft to invest in some sort of "creep consultant" to minimize all the awkwardness.

FAST GUY DIES

The first person to run a mile in under four minutes — Roger Bannister — died this past weekend at the age of 88.

Growing up and doing the Presidential Physical Fitness test, I often marveled at how Bannister pulled this off. Under four minutes to run a mile surely seemed impossible — even if it was done countless times after the fact.

It's kind of a shame kids these days don't have that Holy Grail of athletic achievement. Even if they do, it's just so damn easy for other cynical kids to poke fun and say, "Yeah, but he was probably on steroids."

YOUNG AT HEART

Aside from that wind and rain that nearly destroyed the entire city, it was a good weekend for Boston.

After all, Rob Gronkowski did not tweet anything cryptic on Saturday or Sunday and did not allude to retiring. Aside from a few promotional deals, the most significant thing Gronk tweeted this past weekend was, "Bands a make her dance" — an innocent reference to a five-year old rap song by Juicy J.

Gronk is totally going to be that guy when he's 45 years old referencing songs and pop culture moments from his 20s — as No. 87 is already forever stuck in 2013.

God bless him.

Aries Keep an open mind, but put the brakes on if impulse starts to take control. Saying or doing something without thought will work against you. Plan your actions with care.

Taurus Start a dialogue and gather pertinent information. Meetings and business trips scheduled will bring good results, as long as you don't divulge secrets or private matters.

Gemini It's what you do for others that will gain you respect. Don't linger over what to do or when to do it. Consider a situation and make a difference to the outcome.

Cancer Pour your heart into what you enjoy doing. Get together with someone who shares your interests. Exchanging ideas will bring diversity to your current endeavors.

Leo Things will not be as they appear. Don't jump to conclusions without getting all the facts firsthand. Exaggeration, indulgent behavior and egotism should be resisted.

Virgo Revamp your current spending habits with saving in mind. Having extra cash readily available will allow you to take advantage of a good deal or investment opportunity.

Libra You can make things happen if you are organized and willing to put a little muscle behind your actions. Don't get frustrated or angry when you can get moving instead.

Scorpio If you share your ideas, someone will offer alternatives that can enhance your plans. Working with someone as unique as you are will be exciting, but will require patience.

Sagittarius Don't leave important tasks to others. Someone you thought you could trust will let you down. Verbalize what you are willing to do and what you want in return.

Capricorn Stay focused on what needs to be done. Put your responsibilities first and refuse to get caught in someone else's melodrama. Back away from an unpredictable situation.

Aquarius Your desire to bring comfort and joy to someone going through a rough patch will be appreciated, and the response and reward you get in return will be valuable.

Pisces Don't fear failure or let anger ruin your day. Look for opportunities by expanding your interests. Romance is highlighted, and financial gains are within reach. EUGENIA LAST
